

“Hans Joachim Schwager Award for Clinical Ethics”

An award for innovative pioneer projects in Clinical Ethics

Goals and awarding conditions

Background and Goals

Clinical Ethics has developed into a very dynamic field. Pioneer work, innovative projects, implementation of clinical ethics support and their evaluation interact and create synergies. At the same time, their start and development is often a response to ethical challenges in patient care, and the implementation of clinical ethics may require stamina and courage from various sides. Difficult political or social circumstances of health care systems may contribute to these challenges.

The Hans Joachim Schwager Award is dedicated to encourage individuals and groups to engage in clinical ethics and communicate their experiences, achievements and difficulties in clinical ethics to a larger audience. Its major goal is to support practitioners who have successfully implemented ethics consultation in healthcare facilities.

The award carries the name of Professor Schwager who was a pioneer in clinical ethics. He initiated ethics education for staff members and consultation rounds in the early nineties, ahead of many other hospitals and institutions in Germany. The cultural and religious diversification of society made it necessary for him to reflect on ethics. He primarily focused on how clinical decisions were made, and enforced the role of the ethicist as one who cares for values and ideas of good life together with common deliberation about it. He was a member of the Board of Directors of the v. Bodelschwingsche Stiftungen Bethel, Bielefeld, Germany – the sponsor of the Hans Joachim Schwager Award.

Forum ICCEC

Since its origins in 2000 and the onset of conferences in 2003, the International Conference on Clinical Ethics and Consultation (ICCEC) has developed into a large community bridging the gap between academia and the practice of patient care. Moreover, the ICCEC forum is inclusive as it integrates interdisciplinary fields, health care professions and also countries from the whole world.

Application and criteria

Applications are welcome from individuals and groups with documented activities of development and implementation in clinical ethics.

The components of a successful application include 1) a description of documented activities with a focus on its process of implementation; 2) an analysis of the challenges or problems encountered in the project and the ethical challenges that the project addressed; 3) a description and discussion of strategies used to successfully address the identified problems; and 4) suggestions how the project might be helpful to others in similar situations.

The award is intended to highlight a successful and exemplary clinical ethics project that might stimulate or advance the practical work of ethicists. Its main purpose is to recognize and disseminate information about success and innovation in the field of clinical ethics consultation and support. It is not intended to reward the individuals involved.

The applicants are asked to assure that the ethical framework of their project is in accordance with the ICN Code of Ethics for Nurses (revised 2017) and the Declaration of Geneva, World Medical Association (amended 2017).

All written communications should be submitted in English language.
